

JORDAN SCHNITZER MUSEUM OF ART

ANNUAL REPORT

2009 – 2010

Bridging Cultures and Communities

JILL HARTZ, Executive Director

This report covers the period July 1, 2009, through June 30, 2010, my second year as the executive director of the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art. Armed with a new mission—to enhance the University of Oregon’s academic mission and further the appreciation and enjoyment of the visual arts for the general public—and a new strategic plan, the JSMA initiated an ambitious program of on- and off-campus collaborations, extended our diversity initiatives, and strengthened our overall operations. We completed our self-study for re-accreditation and in the process upgraded policies and procedures, developed project and assessment templates, refined our collections database and launched a collections search engine on our website.

Thanks to a highly capable staff, a supportive university administration, extensive faculty and student participation, and a committed corps of volunteers, we affirmed our commitment to our founder’s vision to use art as a powerful educational and inspirational vehicle to bridge cultures and communities.

Governance, Staff, and Budget

In furtherance of our new mission, the museum became a joint report to Jim Bean, the Senior Vice President and Provost, and Michael Redding, Vice President for University Relations. Both have been instrumental in enabling the museum to meet major challenges and advance our ambitious goal to become one of the finest university art museums in the world.

We benefited immeasurably from the support of University Relations to hire a chief curator. Anne Rose Kitagawa, formerly the assistant curator of Japanese art at the Harvard Art Museum, assumed her position in mid-June. She has taken on numerous tasks in relation to re-accreditation and collections management, re-installing galleries, meeting collectors and other prospects, and identifying ways in which the museum can better enhance the curriculum. Danielle Knapp became our first McCosh Fellow Curator, a new position made possible with the McCosh Endowment that focuses primarily on research, dissemination and exhibition of the McCosh collection.

A number of valued staff members—Charles Lachman, part-time curator of Asian art, Rick Gehrke, chief preparator, Erick Hoffman, communications director, and Miriam Jordan, administrative assistant—left to pursue other opportunities during the year. We welcomed Charly Swing as our new chief preparator, and Debbie Williamson-Smith assumed coordination of our communications program. Adriane Tafoya was lured from San Francisco to become our collections manager. We reallocated funding from current positions to create a new collections database coordinator position (Jonathan Smith), a membership/annual giving/assistant position in Development (Emily Kersten), and a graphics manager position (Diane Nelson). We revised our Museum Educator position (Sharon Kaplan) to prioritize program and visitor evaluation and academic support. Lauren Suveges, while maintaining her education support role, also became our part-time office assistant. In the coming year, thanks to support from the Provost, we will hire a new security administrator.

Staff members attended professional workshops in marketing and social media, collections care and conservation, and evaluation. I was appointed secretary of the Association of Academic Museums and Galleries (AAMG), the national organization representing college and university museums, galleries and collections, and continued as an IMLS and AAM MAP and Accreditation reviewer. Lisa Abia-Smith, director of education, became a member of the Teacher Standards and Practices Commission of Oregon, served on a state commission to finalize Teacher Licensure Tests (Art Credential), and joined the boards of the Oregon Art Education Association and the Visual Thinking Strategies Northwest.

Collections

The year saw great improvement in the reorganization of collections storage, inventory, and general care of the collection. With state grant support, we upgraded our collections database and added about 4,000 objects to our on-line search engine. This is an ongoing project, and we have a goal of making the remainder of the collections accessible online by the summer of 2011. We began work on a collections development plan reflecting our broader collecting mission. Federally funded conservation grants have enabled timely work to be accomplished, and we submitted a long-range conservation survey proposal to the IMLS.

The museum welcomed major loans that enhanced the curriculum and visitor appreciation. Magnificent paintings by J.M.W. Turner, Max Pechstein, and Picasso, a Balinese ider-ider, and two sculptures—Claes Oldenburg’s Typewriter Eraser and Zhang Wang’s stainless steel Artificial Rock No. 40—added immeasurably to curricular enhancements and viewing pleasure. We thank the many lenders of these works for sharing their treasures with us.

Our permanent collections welcomed forty gifts and purchases that strengthened our holdings of Asian, Pacific Northwest, European and Latin American art in a range of media. Among these were a selection of Korean ceramics from the From the Fire exhibition (2007); photographs by Maria Magdalena Compos-Pons, Binh Danh, George Tice, and Chris McCaw; and beautiful Japanese paintings on silk.

Jill Hartz and Anne Rose Kitagawa

WELCOME, ANNE ROSE KITAGAWA

The child of University of Chicago professors, Anne Rose Kitagawa had the privilege of early exposure to the arts and cultures of Asia. After graduating from Oberlin College with high honors in East Asian Studies and Art History, she worked for one summer at the Internuseum Conservation Association in Oberlin and for one year in the Department of Asian Art at the Art Institute of Chicago before receiving a Mellon Fellowship to study Japanese art and archeology at Princeton. In 1993, she was hired as a research assistant in Japanese art at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and later as an assistant curator of Japanese art at the Harvard Art Museum, where she spent the past fourteen years engaged in research and educating students and visitors through exhibitions, publications, and lectures on Asian art. An object-oriented art historian specializing in the field of Japanese painting, particularly the great medieval Japanese narrative handscroll tradition, Anne Rose also has deep interest in East Asian lacquer, Buddhist art, cross-cultural influences, historiography, and material studies and conservation.

“We are so fortunate to have Anne Rose here,” says executive director Jill Hartz. “The museum is benefiting tremendously from her knowledge, experience, and passion for the arts and education. Anne Rose is wearing at least three hats,” she continues. “First, as chief curator, she manages our entire curatorial program. Second, as curator of Asian art, she is dedicated to strengthening the art and programs of one of our core areas. Third, as director of academic programs, she insures that faculty and students participate in meaningful and creative projects that enhance curricula and cultural awareness.”

Special Exhibitions

Each year the museum presents four major exhibitions and more than eight smaller shows in our special exhibitions and collections galleries. Our summer 2009 show—On the Road: Two Visions of the Tokaido—took visitors along the 300-mile journey between Edo and Kyoto, through a comparison of the fifty-three views (all from the JSMA's permanent collection) by 19th century artist Utagawa Hiroshige and 20th-century artist Jun'ichirō Sekino. The exhibition reprised a 1975 exhibition, organized by Robert and Yoko McClain, who were close friends of Sekino and donated his series to the museum.

From flights of fancy to all too real ecological concerns, the JSMA shared a breadth of art and ideas with more than 60,000 visitors in 2009–10. Faster Than a Speeding Bullet: The Art of the Superhero opened our fall season and launched a year characterized by interdisciplinary collaboration, academic support, student involvement, and educational outreach. Curated by Ben Saunders, associate professor in the English Department, the exhibition, its catalogue, symposium, and related activities brought together faculty and students from five of the university's schools and colleges and more than fourteen departments. Loans of rare original pages, the commission of three works by well-known international artists, and presentations by artists and scholars broke new ground in situating the work within art historical and cultural contexts. K–12 programs and family activities, including NewArt Northwest Kids and a superheroes-themed Interactive Discovery Gallery, as well as a companion show of Japanese prints featuring heroes and demons, added excitement and depth to the fall program.

Amazonia: Photographs by Sam Abell and Torben Ulrik Nissen, our major winter exhibition, was a project that traveled with me from my previous post in Charlottesville, thanks to the generous support of the Oakwood Foundation. Faithful to a stringent documentary ethic, Abell and Nissen visited the remote headwaters of the Amazon over a five year period to capture on film the rich biodiversity and wildlife that makes this ecosystem so crucial to survival on the planet. The artists' first-hand accounts, gallery talks, and photography workshop inspired a multi-age constituency. The exhibition has since traveled to Les Yeux du Monde Gallery in Charlottesville, Virginia, and Westwood Gallery in New York City.

We closed the year with One Step Big Shot: Portraits by Andy Warhol and Gus Van Sant, curated by Lawrence Fong. While many museums are now presenting shows featuring Warhol Polaroids given to them by The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts Legacy Program, the JSMA exhibition may be the most inventive in its pairing of these two artists. While Van Sant, a Portland-based artist, never met Warhol, they shared significant influences, including the Beats and gay culture, and both used the Polaroid as a creative catalyst. By contextualizing the Polaroids with the artists' prints and short films, the exhibition brought new appreciation to Warhol's oeuvre and provide one of the first opportunities to see the Polaroids Van Sant used to cast his films.

Highlights among our other exhibitions were Clinton Hill: Selections from a Fifty Year Survey, Media Alchemy of Nam June Paik, and Views, Vistas and Vignettes: The Art of the Book. The first featured work by a UO alumnus who pursued a successful career in New York as both an artist and teacher. Organized by the Beall Center for Art+Technology at University of California, Irvine, the Paik exhibition presented some of the artist's best known multimedia works as well as the rarely seen Gulliver installation.

In support of the Oregon Humanities Center's focus on the book, we invited noted scholar and artist Johanna Drucker to curate a handsome and provocative exhibition. We were also pleased to participate in the opening of the White Box, a visual learning lab at the UO's White Stag Portland center. John Jay, global creative director, Wieden + Kennedy, curated the inaugural exhibition in conjunction with a major Chinese design show at the Portland Art Museum. Selections from the JSMA Chinese art collection as well as the private loan of a magnificent scholar's rock were on view alongside work by UO digital arts students, who took their inspiration from them. We were also pleased to partner with the White Box in the spring on a selection of photographs by Weegee on loan to both locations from the Alan and Ellen Newberg Collection of Weegee Photographs.

Throughout the year we were preparing for the special exhibition Giuseppe Vasi's Rome: Lasting Impressions from the Age of the Grand Tour, a ground-breaking project guest-curated by James Tice, professor of architecture, and James Harper, associate professor of art history. Opening in late September 2010, the exhibition will be the most ambitious ever mounted by the museum, thanks in large part to a generous Strategic Initiatives grant from the provost.

The Museum continues to provide essential art education to K-12 schools.

Sam Abell leads a tour of Amazonia.

Ben Saunders, associate professor of English and guest-curator of our special Superheroes exhibition, discusses the show and programs with students.

James Harper, associate professor of art history, and students in "Collecting and the Museum," an art history course taught in winter 2010 by Harper and JSMA executive director Jill Hartz, examine their chosen paintings.

Public Programs & Academic Support

Recognizing the budget cuts facing our public schools, the JSMA created "Fill Up the Bus," a campaign with a goal of raising $15,000 to provide field trip support to schools throughout the region. Thanks to our Exhibitions Interpreters, members, and community supporters, we reached our goal! We did not foresee that more than 90 percent of the schools—even those as far as Portland—would call on these resources. Through interactive tours, followed by studio activities, in-service teacher workshops, curriculum support guides, art kits, after-school programs, children's exhibitions, and artist residencies, the museum continues to provide essential art education to K-12 schools throughout the state. Thanks to a new state grant we are piloting a program that utilizes our online Asian art collection to teach studio art and enhance academics throughout Oregon's schools.

Academic support on campus was also in full swing. James Harper, associate professor of art history, and I taught a winter term course, "Collecting and the Museum," using old master paintings borrowed from the Roy G. and Jeanne F. Neville Collection (a promised gift to the JSMA), and an additional work gifted by Roger Abbott. Open to upper-level undergraduate and graduate students, the course exemplifies the educational value of a university museum in the teaching of art history and museum practice. Each student selected a work and conducted curatorial research culminating in papers articulating their value to the collection. Their readings and visits with collectors, conservators, appraisers, and scholars explored connoisseurship, collections care, authenticity, and ethics. Also, works on view in permanent collections galleries and the Gilkey Center were incorporated into photography, arts administration and art history courses.

Diversity initiatives were strengthened thanks to a University Relations diversity grant and an AAM MAP: Public Dimensions grant, both focused on building and sustaining Latin America, Asian, and Asian American constituents. Spanish translations were incorporated into exhibition didactics, audio tours, catalog translations, interactive tours, and marketing materials, Korean language was added to the Korean Funerary Figures exhibition and Japanese to the Tokaido exhibition. Members of these constituencies joined our Leadership Council, Exhibition Interpreters and committees. We were also successful in securing grants to provide ongoing translations in our permanent collections galleries and to partner with the state's tourism agency in creating a strategic plan for Asian visitors. The research will help to determine what cultural and programmatic needs and interest will attract Asian students and scholars to the region and how well we are meeting those needs; it will also help to identify travel needs and preferences of the students' friends and family members who travel from Asia to visit them in Oregon. On- and off-campus constituencies participated in Dia de los Muertos and Asian Celebration, the Queer Film Festival, Family Days, Saturday Celebrations, Fiesta Latina, and the inaugural Cinema Pacific film festival.

During the summer Sandy Kita, an independent scholar at Chatham College and a nationally recognized ukiyo-e expert, conducted a summer course through UO's Academic Extension on Japanese prints. The one-week intensive brought together collectors from across the country as well as students at the UO and Lane Community College.

Each year, the museum selects graduate and undergraduate students to work in all areas of its operation. Some receive funding or academic credit, while others volunteer. Students enjoy a wealth of hands-on opportunities from collections research and care to exhibition organization and studio programs. We particularly benefited from the assistance of four graduate students: Jessica Wilks and Danielle Knapp (now our McCosh Fellow Curator) conducted a comprehensive inventory of the university's art collection and made thoughtful recommendations for its management; graduate student Brooke Masek was instrumental in compiling the supplementary materials required for our re-accreditation application, and Cassondra Tinsley researched Vasi and the Grand Tour, preparing a plan for the Interactive Discovery Gallery and K-12 curriculum.

The JSMA welcomes thousands of K-12 students each year from across the state.

Community Kudos!

On June 4, the JSMA and Kendall Subaru were honored at the inaugural Arts and Business Alliance of Eugene (ABAE) award ceremony and breakfast, held at the Hult Center. Kendall Subaru sponsored the JSMA's March Family Day that brought more than 800 children and adults to the museum for Amazonia-related programs. THE ABAE is a relatively new group composed of business, cultural, and educational leaders committed to enriching the cultural life of Eugene by acting as a catalyst for creating dynamic partnerships between the arts, culture and business sectors.

Local artist Betsy Wolfston designed the striking ceramic award.

Volunteers

The JSMA's Exhibition Interpreter program continued to thrive during 2009–10 and volunteers provided a record number of tours for K–12 students and university classes. In addition to providing tours for diverse audiences, the EIs visited schools throughout the region for pre-tour activities.

One of the benefits of being an EI is the opportunity to travel locally, regionally, and across the country to visit museums and meet other art museum docents. Field trips this year included the Reinmuth Foundry in Eugene, Portland Art Museum, Seattle Art Museum, and artists' studios, such as that of Sarkis Antikajian in Junction City.

Museum staff, UO faculty, graduate students, and local artists and gallery owners provided dynamic training sessions for our EIs. These included information on Chinese contemporary art and culture, touring visitors with disabilities, integrating writing and poetry with tours, and artist demonstrations on printmaking and woodblock prints.

The EI program lost one of our beloved volunteers, Judy Rinaldi, on January 28. Judy was a dedicated EI who loved touring younger children; her passion for art education will be sorely missed.

JSMA's long-standing volunteer corps, Gourmet Group I and Gourmet Group II, continued to support important JSMA programs. Gourmet Group I, co-chaired by Carol Berkman and Marilyn Ditto, raised funds for the Fill Up the Bus campaign. Gourmet Group II, co-chaired by Leanne Wong, Melanie MacKinnon, and Kelli Bell, spent the year planning and organizing a major fundraiser, Una Serata per l'Arte—A Night for the Arts, scheduled to be held in September 2010; all proceeds from the event will support the museum's educational and public programs.

The museum's Leadership Council, its primary advisory group, provided significant support, advocacy and advice throughout the year. Dr. Lee Michels completed his two-year term as president, during which he helped to steer the museum and its volunteers through its new mission and strategic planning process. The museum is, indeed, in a stronger position thanks to his dedication and leadership. The Council met four times, with much of its activity directed at the committee level. The "Action Team," originating in the Development Committee as a means of prioritizing projects and raising needed funds,

HOPE PRESSMAN RECEIVES WARNER AWARD

On June 9, 2010, Hope Hughes Pressman received the JSMA's 2010 Gertrude Bass Warner Award in recognition of her dedication, commitment, and service to the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art. Jordan Schnitzer presented the award at the JSMA's annual membership meeting and season preview in the presence of Pressman's family members and a large audience of fellow JSMA supporters. Schnitzer praised Pressman's many years of service, both as a member of the JSMA's Leadership Council and as a long-standing museum volunteer of many talents. An alumnus and former UO faculty member, Ms. Pressman also serves as an emeritus trustee of the University of Oregon Foundation and has received the UO Pioneer Award (1990) and Distinguished Service Award (1998).

became a successful model for overall project management. Teams—composed of Leadership Council members as well as additional faculty students, off-campus community partners, and JSMA staff—brought stronger resources and planning to major exhibitions, educational initiatives, and facility renovations aimed at mission-support and audience development. Greg Fitz-Gerald, vice president and chair of the Long-range Planning Committee, will assume the presidency this summer.
