Subliminal Standard was a public art piece Ancart installed in Brooklyn as an homage to New York City’s freestanding handball walls. Read articles in Cultured Magazine (“Back and Forth with Artist Harold Ancart”) and The Art Newspaper (“Harold Ancart on the Art of Handball”) about the project.

Watch an artist talk with Ancart sponsored by Public Art Fund Talks and organized in collaboration with the Cooper Union. The series features “internationally renowned artists who offer insights into artmaking and its personal, social, and cultural contexts.”

The 2020 exhibition, Traveling Light, at David Zwirner Gallery was Ancart’s first solo show with the gallery in New York. Read a New York Times article in anticipation of the exhibition’s opening and an article in Interview Magazine. Take a tour of the exhibition with the artist in a video walkthrough.

Read a 2020 interview in Purple Magazine with the artist by Emilien Crespo and Olivier Zahm.

David Zwirner Paris opened La Grande Profondeur (The Deep End) in 2021, the artist’s first exhibition of sculptural works.

Harold Ancart began his studies in political science before turning to become an artist in the early 2000s. Ancart is interested in the built environment and human interaction with natural landscapes; he often creates serialized images of subjects including trees, flowers, and icebergs. Untitled is one in a series of cosmic nightscape the artist painted in 2015. The vibrant rainbow colors juxtaposed against the black background gives the bloom an otherworldly glow. Ancart once said: “Great painters are explorers. They’re great wanderers. And if you only go places you know, you’re missing out on a lot of things.”
