The Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art invites submissions for the 14th annual NewArt Northwest Kids exhibition.

Teachers of public, private, and home school students in grades K–12 may submit work for consideration in this show of student art.

About the exhibition
This year’s theme, Brave Spaces, encourages students to share their own stories, real or imaginary, through words and images. Students are invited to take this prompt in many different directions. Students could use artwork to tell a personal story of bravery that helped define who they are, they could illustrate a scene from a book they love, or they could create a story from their imaginations or dreams. The artwork can be created with a variety of media including painting, prints, digital art, illustration, and collage. Students are required to answer the questions posed in the entry form to provide context about their work. Please note that 3D work cannot be considered at this time. The theme can also be connected to Common Core subject areas of history, social studies, science, and language arts. See http://jsma.uoregon.edu/NANK for more activity ideas responding to the theme.

The NewArt Northwest Kids exhibition will be on view

How to participate
Teachers and parents are asked to select a limited number of student works to submit—one entry per student. Museum staff will select a maximum of fifty pieces for the show. Additional works may be shown in a JSMA exhibition at the airport concurrent or following this exhibition.
