About the exhibition

This year's theme, Strange Weather, encourages students to think creatively about the fragility of earth and human relationships. Students are invited to use their imagination and problem-solving skills to represent solutions for improving our world including solutions to climate-based challenges in our present and future. Students should use this prompt to imagine an inclusive and sustainable future, illustrate an invention, or create a story that demonstrates their relationship with nature or how nature shapes their identity.

Artwork can be made with a variety of media, including paint, print, digital art, illustration, and collage. Please note that 3D work cannot be considered at this time. Students are required to answer the questions posed in the entry form to provide context about their work. Connect the theme to Common Core subject areas of history, social studies, science, and language arts. See jsma.uoregon.edu/NANK for more thematic activities.

Imagine the future: illustrate an invention that impacts climate issues or create a story that demonstrates your relationship with nature or how nature shapes your identity.

How to participate

Teachers and parents/guardians are asked to select a limited number of student works to submit – one entry per student. Museum staff will select a maximum of 33 pieces for the show. Additional works may be shown in a JSMA installation at the Eugene Airport concurrent to or following this exhibition.

Submissions must adhere to the following guidelines

Artwork must be submitted digitally
Artwork must have been created within the past year.
Two-dimensional work only, unmattd and unframed.
Maximum size: 12 inches x 16 inches.

Submissions must include a completed entry form and be received by January 22, 2024.
